COLOPHON

The Toike Oike is produced using a number of i's and o's. They combine to create programs which the Toike Oike uses as "tools" to produce a newspaper that is both humorous and delicious. The body is set in Georgia and the paper is white.

WHAT HO?

The Toike Oike is a covert organization committed to the proliferation of humour at the University of Toronto. It is our mandate to insist that your education is NOT about your career so much as it is about shaping your outlook on life to come. So lighten up, sit back and have an iced tea (even if it's cold outside). Our ranks are filled with zealous revolutionaries from both Engineering and Arts & Science. We meet every month following distribution. Viva la revolution!

DISCLAIMER

The radical, ultra left-wing opinions expressed in this newspaper do not necessarily reflect those of the Engineering Society or the University of Toronto. In fact, they don't even necessarily reflect the opinions of the writers. If you happen to find any of the material within these pages offensive, do not try to sue us, as we have a crack team of crackhead lawyers ready to bring the pain. Sucka.

University of Toronto Students' Union

EDITORIAL

So you may or may not have noticed this issue is slightly late. I assure all of our loyal readers there is a good reason for that.

Recently our engineering servers came under attack of the 1337357 of h4xor3s! I'm not sure what, exactly, they did... though I'm sure you're not interested in the technobabble at rootkits and the intertron, anyways. All that matters is that the Toike was without email access, contacts for members and file access for over a week. And I have only one question:

WHY?!

Not hacking... I can see why someone would want to shake things up, rattle some cages and get in the Man's face. What I don't understand is why someone would hack the servers of a university. Not even the university servers, but the engineering servers. What reason could someone possibly have to target us? Has Waterloo Eng finally had enough of Toronto's "in-your-face" attitude and used every RIM co-op student at their disposal to teach us a lesson? Is the UTSU finally sick of our delightful dome additions? I need to know the 'why' behind it all!

Moving along...

As we pass through black history month, I feel it is my duty to share some of my findings with our readership. As a white person who has learned a great deal and become very sensitive to the topic, I should enlighten others who are not so fortunate. Here's what I know, so far:

Black has had a long history, and it has not been easy. It all started in 1903 two young chaps named Binney & Smith produced their first eight-pack of crayons. At the time, the colour was simply Black. As history progressed, it became clear that "black" was not an appropriate name and far too great of a generalization. Why should Jet-Black, Tar and Carbon Black all share the same story? Sadly these liberties were not granted to the crayons for a long time. In fact, it took until 1998 for Crayola to add the colour Outerspace!

But name changes aren't the only challenges black faces, and they are not all in the past.

Too often I witness "dark matter" being treated as essentially invisible to all the stuck-up white (and other coloured) matter strutting their shit about the universe. What is that all about? You can't just ignore the dark matter and expect it to go away, because it's not. The dark matter is part of the universe just like all the other colours. Hell, it contributes more mass and energy than all the other matters put together. Not to mention its contribution to hip hop and urban culture. Don't even get me started on the prejudice and fear that is associated with things like "black holes."

I mean, has anyone ever stopped and considered the positive impact black has on our lives? Think of the emergency work done by the "black box" in commercial aviation. What about blackmail? It is the essential foundation of any business, including the Toike!

To sum it all up, give black a break. Just remember it's worked harder than all the other colours to get here and it's not going anywhere.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editor,

How do you find time to answer all of your letters?

Beckett O'Conneur

Becks,

Its pretty easy really. Amateurs like you answer every single letter. I just choose to answer the ones that I can sum up in a few short sentences while still looking like I care about the people... which I don't.

-Ed

Chief Chicorli,

I have been reading your periodical for a while now, and I have a few questions/comments.

1) You should put more comics in that remind me of internet abbreviations gone wrong.

2) Does that Aaron Peever guy really do all the horrible things that he writes about?

Concerned Citizen who is LMAO

Citizen,

1) Those comics are retarded and I hate them. They make it to print when there is nothing else to print, or when I am not around to destroy them. OMG they are so not funny. Lolz.

2) Due to an ongoing criminal and civil investigation, I am not able to make any comment on behalf of the Toike Oike regarding the actions of any sleaze ball staff writers. (Off the Record- he is a total stud and its all true.)

- Chief Running-Toike

Dear Editor,

Do you believe in God?
-Shane Hoss

Hoss,

*Well, you're really asking two questions there. My name may lead you to believe that I do follow the teachings of Jesus. And while this is in fact the case, it's interesting to note that I don't own a pair of sandals. Kind of weird seeing as how that was the preferred footwear of people declared to be messiahs. Even though Oscar Wilde was a little flamboyant, it doesn't mean we will think that way about you if you come and write for us... Sally.

GROUNDHOG DAY UPDATE

WIARTON - It looks like it spring is just around the corner as Wiarton Willy emerged from his burrow at 6:00 am on Friday February 2nd and was not startled by his own shadow. The overcast skies created perfect conditions for the marmot to freely and confidently emerge from his burrow. Legend has it that when the groundhog awakes from his winter sleep and does not see his shadow, we will have an early spring. Conversely, when the groundhog sees his shadow, it is an indication that we will have to wait until the official start of spring for the miserable weather to let up. Groundhog day is also traditionally a day of reflection where those typically considered narcissistic assholes need to change their ways.

TIME/WARNER SUGGESTS CLINTON LOW ON POLLS

A recent survey suggests that Barack Obama is more likely than Hillary Clinton to become President in 2008, even though he is "openly non-white" and running for office in the United States. When asked for comment on Hillary's position, past President Bill Clinton has stated, "Yeah, she's sort of low on the polls, and as her husband this is an occasional source of frustration." He suggested "if only she would work a bit harder on the polls, maybe things wouldn't be going so rough... I hate to say it, but I'm rather focused on the poll results, and she's just not working the polls enough."

Clinton went on to say that "I just really wish she was more interested in polls. I think it's something that the American public can appreciate in a woman, and more importantly, it's something I would appreciate."

"I mean, it's about time."

ENGINEERING COMMUNICATION CENTRE GETTING AN UPGRADE

The Engineering Communication Centre (ECC) is getting a long needed upgrade, to become the Engineering Advanced Communication Centre. This comes soon after the faculty approved funding to help incoming students deal with their writing and English deficiencies.

Dr. Peter Weiss, head of the new centre, said that "with the new Advanced Communication Centre, we are better able to meet the students' communication needs. The new centre is bigger, better staffed and more accessible, but most importantly it gives control of the Ion Cannon orbital beam weapon."

With their newfound control of the Ion Cannon, the EACC will finally be able to give the Engineering Career Centre a run for their money.

Conservative Party Calls Stephane Dion "A Pussy"

While Stephen Harper's Conservative government maintains they are not spoiling for an election, they have never the less started issuing attack ads against newly elected Liberal leader Stephane Dion. These ads feature snippets of the Liberal leadership debate, taken out of context to make Mr. Dion look bad.

"Basically, Mr. Dion represents a novel threat for Mr. Harper's government" said Cannes Lander, a member of the Conservative Party's press team. "That new threat is a real, bonifide leader at the Liberal Party. Up until now the Liberals have been leaderless, and Mr. Harper would like it to stay that way." An associate, Lai Bell, agreed. "Stephane Dion is an articulate bilingual liberal from Quebec. The last time the Liberals had one of those in charge they wiped the floor with us for 12 years. And he was a mean corrupt bastard - just imagine what Mr. Dion could do!" she said. "We need to nip this one in the bud - hmm, 'bud'. We could say Mr. Dion is pro-marijuana. If I know anything about the good Canadians who elected us by a slim margin, it's that they hate pot."

"The take home message from all of this is that Stephane Dion is not a leader," said Prime Minister Stephen Harper. "Yes, I know he was elected a leader, and that for the vast majority of Canadian history being the liberal leader is synonymous with Prime Minister, and that most Canadians are losing what little faith they had in the Conservative party due to the my - I mean my shiftless Cabinet's - bungling, but just look at our out-of-place footage from the leadership convention! When asked about the environment, Stephane pauses for several seconds to collect his thoughts, then says that prioritizing is difficult. Canadians do not want these qualities in a leader: they need someone decisive who acts without thinking and never bathes to justify his actions. I am that type of leader. You know who else is? George W. Bush. And under my leadership Canada will soon be in the same golden age enjoyed by the United States."

Overall, the Conservatives are adamant. "We do not want an election, Canadians do not want an election" said Conservative party member Tom Foulle. "And if that pussy, Stephane Dion, calls an election because we unnecessarily and inappropriately impuned on his character with unwarranted attack ads, I hope Canadians will take note:

the Liberals want another election - and that is bad."

- John McLeod

No Date and No Money on Valentine's Day? No Problem

If you're anything like me, this probably isn't a problem you are concerned with. It just doesn't happen. But for everyone else who is stuck on the fourteenth without a special girl or any money to help pick one up, I can help.

It's important to remember that there are tonnes of girls out there, just like you on Valentine's Day. They are just as bummed out about not having anyone to give them cause to make another trip to the public health clinic or their latest pregnancy scare. This is where you can capitalize.

Lonely girls whodn't want to be lonely usually make their way out to a bar. When trying to find a bar that will offer the most success, I like to remember what my Uncle said before he abruptly moved to Kingston for two years less a day: "I like my bars like I like my women: trashy and easy to get into." With this wisdom in mind find a dive. This is where the ones with the low self-esteem will hang out. Also try to find the darkest bar possible. Trust me: this will come in handy later on.

So you're at the bar and there's plenty of tall just waiting to be saved from another miserable Valentine's Day but you can't have any money. Is this is a problem? Of course not! It's all in the timing. Don't show up at the place at 9:00, you'll be forced to buy drinks you can't afford and listen to pointless cat story after cat story. All of this from the same girl who will eventually gain enough confidence, by comparing her life to yours, to realise there is no chance in hell that she will sleep with you. Instead, get to the bar at 1:45, right before last call. Find the girl who still thinks she is going to die alone and has such overwhelming guilt she is wasting her womb, that she will let anyone take a crack at trying to get the cabwabs out of there. Now, this girl will have already spent the night dawning cosmopolitans because they make her feel pretty. It's your job now to just buy her that last drink that will make you look like the knight in shining armour, ready to make her feel like a woman.

Now here is the most important step in the entire process. If you screw this up all is lost. You need to leave the bar before the house lights, or 'the ugly lights,' come on. Do you really want to see the true face of loneliness minutes before you give her your valentine up against a trash can in the alley? Of course not. And she doesn't want to see your pathetic mug either. It's probably even a good idea to bring a pair of sunglasses just in case either of you is feeling any doubts.

That's pretty much all there is to it. Just show up before last call, find the leftovers and you are ready to make this a Valentine's Day to remember. Just make sure you head over to the clinic within 24 hours to make sure there's not going to be a Valentine's Day massacre in your boxer shorts because you managed to snag one in between flure-ups.

Virgin Sex Columnist

She's inexperienced and she's eager - just like the rest of our staff. Write to the Virgin Sex Column about those burning questions and desires.

- Ed

Dear VSC,
I am a healthy male, aged 17. I have been with my girlfriend for quite some time now, and wish to go to the next 'level'. However, she is resistant. Is there anything I can do to break her down?
- Desperate and Blue

A: Dear Desperate,

Since women are fickle, you are going to have to prove your worth to her. So you're going to have to work at it. Hard work such as: continually telling her you love her, constant gifts of candy and flowers, and your services as a bug-killer and heavy-objects lifter will definitely help. Alternatively, but of questionable legality, there are always Long Island Ice Teas. We, women, are powerless to its charms. But you didn't hear it from me.

Dear VSC,
Let's have sex.
- Aaron Pervert

Dear Aaron:

Unless you are secretly Jake Gyllenhaal or the boy I am stalking in class, you are not getting into my pants. However, if you are interested in a long, commitment-filled, non-sexual relationship full of sunsets, beaches, and hand-holding, I'm all for it. I'll meet you in the SS lobby next Tuesday at noon.

That's all for this installment at the Virgin Sex Column. loyal readers. Be sure to send in your questions for the Virgin Sex Columnist so they may be answered next issue!

Showing Off Your Kept Man

Congratulations! You've divorced/ murdered the old man/sued the shampoo manufacturer for making you bald and are now fabulously wealthy! You've picked the best-looking man from the bar/TV reality show/mail-order catalogue and have promptly named him your new 'kept man'. But not all kept men are created equal: the other bitches of the Country Club are going to want to show off their men as well. Here's how to best display your man.

1. THE CLOTHES

No woman should be caught dead with a man wearing less than Armani, Gucci or Dolce and Gabbano. He should have all of these despite the fact that he will be mostly wearing a designer Speedo to re-enact your 'Pool Boy' fantasy. You'll need many of these banana hammocks. Also, clothes from his previous life should be burned to avoid contamination. Bargain tip: If you decide to dump this man, keep all his clothes for the next one. A good Armani suit never goes out of style.

2. THE BODY

Your man should be impeccably groomed at all times. Make sure to chain him to the ab machine for a minimum of 2 hours a day. His six-pack should also be so defined he can pick up quarters with it (or bounce quarters off it). Train your man in the fine arts of hair styling, body waxing and accessory pimping.

3. THE MIND

Not strictly necessary, as the smart ones try to escape and become 'their own person'. If you want to have a conversation, you'll coll the ugly people. Just tell him to "...shut up and look pretty, or you'll get the closet again!"

4. THE COUNTRY CLUB

This is one of the most important aspects: If you don't assert your authority here, you'll be labelled a "nouveau riche gold-digger with no taste in man-condy." This is akin to that precious male prison advice: When you get to prison, assert your dominance as a 'top' right away, or you'll be the bitch of a big man named Molly." If a discussion about kept men occurs, quickly speak about your man's qualifications:

"Well... MY man was trained by the masters of Komo Sutra AND Tantric, works as a screenplay writer for romantic-comedies, and is trained as a massage therapist. Viagra is taken from his excess sex drive and put into pill form. He won Mr. Universe. Twice. Oh, and he's the biological child-clone of Brad Pitt and George Clooney." Wait for the owed silence, then walk away to get another martini. Your job is done; you might as well spend the rest of the day in a blissful, drunken stupor while you abuse the immigrant Cobona boys.

5. DEALING WITH PROBLEMS

Any other problems with your man can be solved with a be-good-or-I'll-cut-your-face-so-you-won't-be-pretty-anymore threat of fugly-ing violence. Following these steps should make you become the Queen Bitch over at the Four Seasons G&C Club. Use your powers for good, of course.

Top Ten Sign You Should Change Your Favourite Sports Team

Once again, the Super Bowl is on the way and my beloved Broncos are trying to get tickets instead of trying to get a spot in the big game. If you are anything like me, you are already questioning your unwavering loyalty to your childhood sports team. Well you aren't alone. The Toike Oike proudly presents this month's Top Ten: Signs You Should Change Your Favourite Sports Team!

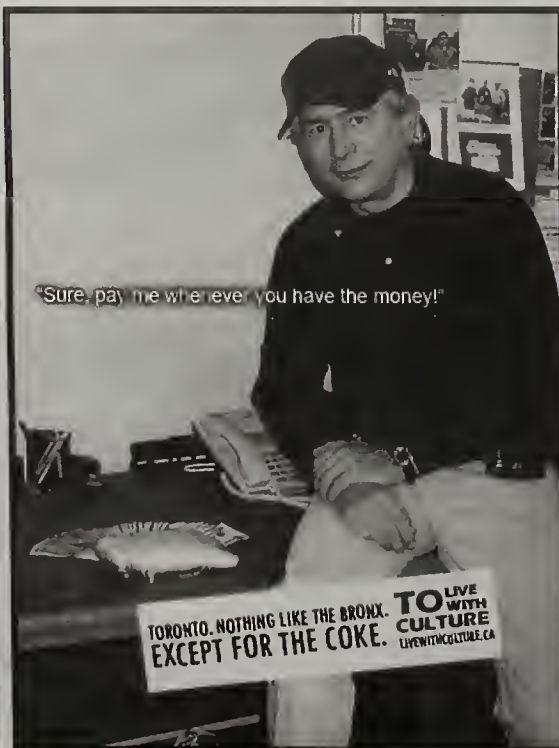

1. If they win a game, it is declared a municipal holiday.
2. Their star player is looking for a "summer home" in another city.
3. Players they droft would rather switch sports than play for that team.
4. If they make the playoffs, it triggers an inquiry into game-fixing.
5. Bookies don't get bets on whether your team will win the championship, they get bets on how early they will be eliminated from playoff contention.
6. Their rivals are a truly pathetic team... so is the Varsity Blues Football Team.
7. The most exciting part of their season is the droft.
8. When local sport commentators talk about a tough battle, they're talking about the pre-season exhibition game against the local college team.
9. The owner has a classified ad out on the team.
10. They haven't a winning season since you were born.

MOOSE BRIEFS

BULLWINKLE ARRESTED FOR DUI, HIT AND RUN

Bullwinkle J. Moose, a children's television star at the 1960s, was arrested by police early Saturday morning on a number of charges including driving under the influence, reckless driving, and failing to remain at the scene of an accident. The television star allegedly struck a pedestrian crossing the road, panicked, and fled the scene. When authorities caught up with Moose, he was exposing himself to a playground full of children allegedly yelling, "Now here's something we hope you'll really like." Indecent exposure charges were not filed since there aren't any laws governing the clothing of animals. Bullwinkle will be arraigned in municipal court early next week.

JUICE BRIEFS

WELCH'S GRAPE JUICE RECALLED AFTER E. COLI SCARE

All Welch's products have been pulled from the shelves this week after some battles have been found to contain the ubiquitous E. Coli bacteria. There were several reported cases of illness and injuries due to the contamination. However a few of those were later disclosed to be cases of child abuse as result of children spilling the drink on the white carpeting. The contamination also hit close to home tar Welch's executives as the ginger-haired three-year-old spokesperson Susie James died in hospital from E. Coli if you think you have been exposed to the bacteria, you are advised to contact local health officials.

Vendors Under Investigation For "Doped Street Meat"

Toronto (Toike) - In an unprecedented turn of events, the Toike Oike has learned that several prominent hot dog vendors near the University of Toronto campus are under investigation based on several anonymous tips that their hot dogs, affectionately known as "street meat" contain illicit drugs in an attempt to get naive Engineering students hooked. "I never would have known!", says Michael Ting, 18. "I think those charges are ridiculous!" he adds as he rushes out the front Wallberg doors following the sweet stench of unknown meat products.

The police reports claim that these vendors, known and loved/hated by most Engineering students, have been spiking their hot dogs, already of questionable nutritional value, with various addictive street drugs including: heroin, cocaine, crystal meth, nicotine, morphine, alcohol, THC, ketamine, LSD, Oxycontin, blood, sex, magic, sugar, spice, and everything nice. Frankie (of indeterminate age), one of the vendors under investigation, has this to say regarding the charges: "I seriously question the forensic talents of the police force in this affair, and I have limited belief in their following of due process. My lawyers will be in touch. Sausage?" he adds in an unusually high vocabulary. When further asked about his education, he added "I am a tenured professor at the Department of Chemical Engineering, why do you think I hang out outside a shithole building like Wallberg and talk to all those smelly Chems?"

However, due to the high interest in this controversy, the Toike had decided to take matters into its own hands and determine whether or not the allegations are accurate. We found, using our trusty and highly reliable ACME mass spectrometer, that the heinous accusations levied against these valued members of the Skule and U at T community were not true. However, it was concluded that the hot dogs in question were not made of beef, or even pork as we were lead to believe. They in fact, contain meat from a subspecies of rat known as rodentius artius, which is commonly found in the Sidney Smith Building, wearing an unusual hat known as a "beret" and doing what they describe as work but humans appears to be sitting around in a circle and passing around a burning object that smelled good. Their meat is not considered fit for human consumption as they are carriers for most STDs known to humans.

When the Toike returned to Prof. Frankie to ask him about the quality of meat used in his hot dogs, he at first appeared wary and hostile, but when he recognized the author as one of his main customers he confided: "Fat Tony promised me dog or higher, I'm gonna have to kneecap him."

Supporters of the street meat vendors have organized a campaign to have the truth behind what they describe as "trumped-up hearsay instigated by the Faculty" exposed and the vendors' good name restored. The author hopes their efforts bear fruit as Skule would be at a supreme disservice if our only source of street meat is the ECE sausage-test.

Cuticle Movement Pushed Back

Reports are in that the widespread Cuticle movement has, once again, suffered a major setback. Pushed back into submission, cut off from natural pathways of traditional expansion, many in the "Cuticle" community are left angry and resentful! Leader of the widespread movement, E. Panychium, says he speaks with the collective voice of the community when he says, "For the most part, society is completely ignorant of us! And when they do recognize us, it's only to push us away, and cut us off from recognition! Far too long we've been called 'ugly' or even 'parasites', well, I'm sorry it we're not pretty! It's about time we received recognition for the hard work we accomplish within Fingernails everywhere!"

According to other progressive leaders in the movement, cuticles believe they protect "the matrix". An ethnic group who follow the "Nail Plate", they believe in stopping infection from entering the matrix, and do so through a complex set of religious rituals.

Most humanitarians have been ignoring the plight of the Cuticle-folk, focusing almost exclusively on the more visible issue of Body Hair, and the tawdry processes of shaving, wax-ripping, and laser-burning / removal. "We don't deny that Body Hair is an issue, we just want our share of attention too!" say various leaders. When asked about the plight of the common cuticle, esthetician Wing-Yee had nothing to say, but she did in fact try to hurt us a little.

Windows Vista Launch

NEW YORK (Toike): The long-awaited upgrade to Windows XP was finally released this week, after years of delay, mismanagement, and infighting. "Look, we would have been done a lot sooner, but our customers are douchebags," said Steve Ballmer explaining the delay. "Normally we just lack a few useless features onto our previous release, and let our marketing demons handle the rest. This year, and by this year I mean the last four years, our customers have been demanding actual improvements. Also, we keep getting sued. I wish they would stop."

Windows Vista boasts a number of improvements over previous models, including better graphics, powerful system shell, and stronger security. The native Internet Explorer has been decoupled from the operating system, and the update manager is a separate program, rather than a web application. Like many boasts, these claims fall short of reality, and it will take several "minor" service packs to get Vista to the same level of usability as Windows XP.

When asked where the inspiration for Vista's new features came from, a project manager had a simple explanation. "At Microsoft we have a very innovative team, who constantly come up with new ideas. Naturally, we keep this team gagged and tied up in the basement, in case they decide to work for Google." He added, "for the Vista project, we went to this weird website, www.redhat.com, and copied a partial list of features for this thing called 'Redhat 6.2'. That was back in 2000." Another project manager said "Windows Vista sprung from a singular vision. The vision of Mac OS 'Tiger' with a Windows Logo."

When asked, many Microsoft software engineers added their own opinions to the mix. "This was a very daunting project, because we were hired based on our knowledge of technobabble - not actual coding skills. I can leverage my synergy until the cows come home, but 'hella world' took me three weeks to master" said one. A colleague of his added, "It would also have helped to have our management actually list out the goals of the project, rather than just bash Linux and Apple all the time."

In general, however, the atmosphere was positive. "I feel we did a good job fathering this latest version of Windows," said one engineer. "And by 'fathering', I mean exactly that - we did the minimal amount of work to create the framework of something that could be a feasible operating system and released it into the womb of the open market, where over the next few years our technical support crews will have the difficult job of growing Vista into a real operating system."

So, Failed Some Classes?

Hey, you failed some classes! Don't worry, the heart palpitations eventually go away. Fearing the shame and disappointment of your family and friends? Screw them! At least you're not pregnant with a child of indeterminate origin or have impregnated a female of questionable sexual cleanliness. I'd still get the tests done, just in case. But that achievement alone should appease worried parental minds.

But how to get back on track, you ask? Easy! Your love affair with TV/sleep/Facebook/blowjobs will have to, sadly, stop. And as much as enacting revenge on the calculus course coordinator by slowly and painfully killing him may seem like a good start to healing, the resulting prison beatings will not. I suggest some sort of brutal sport such as rugby, hockey or bare-knuckle boxing to release pent-up frustrations. I know my dog will never be the same again, but she shouldn't have been there when I discovered Algebra is the Spawn of Satan. She loves her new wheelchair, though! It's pretty and sparkly and matches her collar. Anyhoo, the point is this: don't worry about failing. There are much worse things (remember the prison beatings we were discussing before? Homemade shivs are not sanitary!).

To conclude: yes, failing sucks and you will get over it. But if this whole article meant nothing to you and you are still going to go all ball-shit crazy on us and take down the school, remember this: there's always business school.

In my own words

My cat just died from second hand smoke, and I'm looking for something else to stroke. I will put out like someone whose last hour has come, because when you have as many lung tumors as I do it might just be your last hour. I like to lie there and take it, because any physical exertion sends me into a coughing fit. I like to stay on the couch, order take-out, and watch TV. My hobbies include making and using ashtrays, and hotboxing.

Since You asked...

My idea of a fun date: A bottle of Colt '45, a pack of smokes, and a lumpy sofa - need I say any more?

I like to talk about: That smart-ass Surgeon General, those losers in Parliament and their no-smoking laws, the second-hand smoke conspiracy.

My friends would describe me as: Smokin'!

In my own words

I am that outrageously hot girl whom you all see around campus. You know, the one who makes Scarlett Johansson look like a 12 year old boy? I am not interested in a relationship, or casual sex. I just want guys to gawk at me so I can scorn them. Next time you see me around, please come up and say "hi". If you don't try to talk to me, you'll never know if you were the one for me. Hoh, I kid, I kid. I don't know who my soulmate is, but I know damned well it's not you, pointindex-ter! Hey, look - I wore a revealing shirt so I can look at you distastefully for ogling my breasts. What a pervert you are.

In my own words

I am an easy going, funny guy with a great personality. I am deeply caring and my friends describe me as "very supportive". I am looking for a casual relationship and maybe something more. I like cooking and pets. I guess internet dating is one of those things you have to try once in your life, so here it goes... I am trying to meet new people and form a connection. By the way, I weigh 450 lbs. I a thin man stuck in a fat man's body, really. Also I eat 6 meals a day. And lather myself up with lard and margarine so I can squeeze through doors easier. But I'm really nice and funny. I swear! It's what's on the inside that counts, right?

Drinking Habits: Alcohol kills brain cells

In my own words

I am a lean, mean, manly machine. I can do 512 push ups. I like 512 because it is a power of 2, not 500 like most jocks would say. Oh crap, I did it again. I'm just a skinny nerd with no social skills. I can't even do 3 push ups. I like role-playing games, anime, Star Trek, and debugging Perl scripts. However, I have glimpsed my future - and it isn't pretty. Therefore, I am willing to change anything and everything for any woman who will give me a chance. Please!

You ever notice how in every group of pimply Star Trek/role-playing/or anime geeks there is always one fairly attractive girl? That's me. Ladies, start your orgasms! I'm a man's man - but not in the gay sense. I like watching sports, driving fast cars, and cooking on the barbeque. People think I'm intelligent, charming, and masculine - or that's what I assume they think because I am too busy being intelligent, charming, and masculine to listen to them. I like to blast my quads at the gym, watch action movies, and hang out at sports bars. I'm not overcompensating for anything - and I'd wish people would stop assuming that I am.

Saddam's Brother Loses Head over Hanging

BAGHDAD [Toike]: Heads are rolling in Maliki's government after another batched execution, this time of Saddam Hussein's brother and chief of intelligence, Barzan Ibrahim al-Tikriti. On January 15th, Barzan and another Saddam official were hung at the same secret police base that hosted Saddam's hanging, two weeks earlier.

"After the first few executions, we thought we had the hang of it" said the chief executioner. "I didn't realize things could fall apart so quickly." Some critics claim that if the prosecution had kept their heads clear, they would have realized that a mere measured pace was in order. "Throughout these proceedings, the prosecution has been a major pain in the neck" said a member of the defense. "This is not justice, this is lying headlong into revenge." Not everyone agreed with those sentiments, however. "Barzan was definitely a criminal. He was head of intelligence, and chief of the Mukhabarat. To bring this man to justice we had to go for the throat," said a member of the prosecution.

Many others realized the inevitability at the execution, including Barzan. "Despite his dire situation, Barzan kept his chin up," said one of his prison guards. "He held himself together, right up to the end." Another prison guard agreed. "Barzan had a level head. Although he privately confided that he was close to flying to pieces, he refused to get hung up on his fate."

Not everyone believed that Barzan met justice however. "Barzan was a minor player in Saddam's instruments of terror" said one of his supporters. "He was modest, not headstrong like Saddam. This is what happens when you let personal vendettas get ahead of the facts." Other supporters agreed. "Barzan did not have the spine for the things he was accused of. He was not the backbone of the Revolutionary Court," said another.

Ultimately the Iraqi government was committed to his execution. "We knew that Barzan was Saddam's half-brother," said a member of President Maliki's administration. "Now Barzan is half of a lot of things."

F!ROSH View Of Skule After One-and-a-bit Semesters

"The Atrium seems to be getting uglier and uglier every time I see it. Is this normal?"

"Do some people here seem drunk?"

"Cause, it's like, 9 am and the crazy guy in the leather jacket is yelling belligerently again. He keeps cursing something called 'Dynamics'."

"That weird 'finger-column' with the ring in the Atrium seriously freaks me out."

"Is it strange that I find all males dressed in an Engineering Jacket attractive? Cause I do."

"Heel I love it when the LGMB crash my lectures! They're so much fun!"

"Purr. Those Blue and Gold chairs are yummy. Sign me up for that!"

"WTF is with the Cannan? That last issue was, like, one sheet!"

"The LGMB crashed my lecture again. God I hate those losers. I need to learn!"

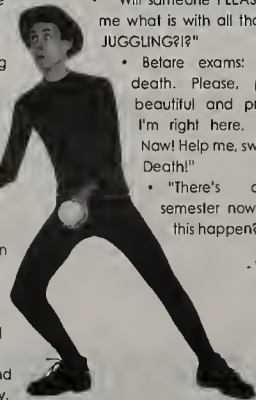

"So...sleeping with the professors is frowned upon? How about TAs?"

"Will someone PLEASE explain to me what is with all that FREAKING JUGGLING?!"

Before exams: "I wish for death. Please, please you beautiful and precious bus. I'm right here. Just gun it! Now! Help me, sweet Angel of Death!"

"There's a second semester now? When did this happen?"

A REAL Letters to the Editor

Date: January 29, 2007

Subject: A very cowardly racial attack in your last issue.

On page 12 of The Toike Oike, Vol XCX- Issue V, January 2007, Article: Secret Confessions from those in the Closet. This fugly East Indian/Pakistani man looking all smug and comfortable. He is a fearless bigot & has the guts to show his fugly mug, comes out of 'the closet' as he describes, and for the first time, shows his true colours-NOT pretty. Since he dished the medicine, he should be able to take it.

Working in the medical field(as Toike Oike is the satirical version of The Cannon for the professional organization: Our sister(or brother): Engineering) with all genders and races, Asian females have time and again proved are one of the kindest in this field, volunteering and assisting others selflessly, and for this stoal-coloured 'terrorist' to be unkind to them for no apparent reason let me take a swipe at him & see if he can take his own medicine:

Does he like the sound of _____? Push Button(Red dot on their forehead(Push Start works too))? Dot-head(Again: red dot on their forehead)? No? How about 'Genie Lover' then? Or Paki. Pak Wag-works the best for this fellow I love this one: Rag-head, or, Towel-head & last but not least: Pet.

Body cover entirely in coarse hair-I've seen an E.I. naked & trust me(thus phala I can see it on his arms) It ain't pretty

And oh, by the way, I prefer my baloney & mayonnaise Classic All-American Wanderbread sandwiches over that terrorist, I mean Paki food fatelat anyday. Tried it, wouldn't recommend it to anyone & the only reason I'd be in the Lebanese neighbours home is to attack them-just like Israel already did in the past: 11,782 times

So terrorist -Next time you decide to run off at the mouth Understand that you may be downed by an even bigger weapon of mass destruction-when I insert my Johnson in your mouth.

That's right: What goes around, comes around you hairy brown monkey Have fun swinging on those metal bars

P.S. When I think about it If he took a shower, his complexion wouldn't be so brown. Therefore, he wouldn't have to hide his dirty face under that cheap hat of his

P.S. 2: Please send a copy to that loser

Thanks Christian Robert Harris

Oh, by the way, I have devalued myself to the Christian religion as well(not sure why you allowed a man of Muslim religion make such bigoted statements in your last issue but I forgive you if you put this piece in the next months issue)

Toike's Blue & Gold Pant Dropping Guide

Now that we've crowned a new Mr. Blue & Gold you may be wondering. "When should I tell him to drop pants?"

Use this handy table and you'll never be in doubt:

APPROPRIATE TIMES

In class, on the subway, in a bar, shavelling snow, at the zoo, attending a proclatagy convention, going through security at the airport

SEMI-APPROPRIATE TIMES

At a funeral (especially while delivering the eulogy), getting arrested, while fighting the Taliban, in church, blackfly season, terrorist attack, Armageddon.

INAPPROPRIATE TIMES

Never

Counter Point: "Johnsons" Are NOT Weapons of Mass Destruction - Especially Yours

As a heterosexual, white, Anglo-Saxon, protestant male aged 18 to 64, I know a little something about discrimination and racism. Up until now, I thought it was something similar to menopause - something that happened to other people.

Now I understand that racism affects everyone- as long as somebody thinks that a photo found on the internet of an Italian guy sitting in a closet is actually a photo of a Pakistani Muslim, and further that the person in question is mistaken for the author of the article (for those of you playing at home, google images: "sitting in closet").

Since I may have run the risk of offending some people with my articles in last month's issue, let me try to clarify the situation. First off, in my second article, I referred to asian women as "chinks". This is obviously offensive. Its also offensive to say "all chink bitches are twopenny whares". Now that we've learned a little something about being offensive, lets move on.

For the record, I discussed the issue with my asian friend, Tapaz Chiu. I asked her if she found being called a "chink" offensive, and she replied "not particularly, you 'see tut gwai!" Although the last part was in Cantonese, I believe it is a sign of respect.

I can certainly take a dose of my own medicine, as long as the prescription is correct. For someone in the medical field, I think you seriously misdiagnosed me. Perhaps "hankey", "cracker", or "peckerwood" (although I am not a redhead - it's still funny. For those of you playing at home, www.wikipedia.org/list_of_ethnic_slurs is an amusing and informative read) would be more appropriate.

As far the rest of your concerns, I can only note that "Johnson" is a popular last name in many inbred towns in the American Southwest, and that your arguments would be a lot more persuasive if you would stick to a single racist theme - rather than randomly including anti-Hindu and anti-Sikh slurs. Also, I believe that "cheap hat" of the pictured gentlemen is part of his company uniform, which I believe is "Custom Shelving Solutions".

As a final note, I would like to point out that there is exactly ZERO racist comments in the two articles in question, and further that they were set up in a "point, counter-point" structure to contradict each other. Next time, may I suggest that you: a) read the articles b) read the disclaimer c) learn to write from English classes, not from internet forums d) stop using the word 'fugly' Let the flame war continue!

GROUNDHOG DAY UPDATE

WARTON - It looks like it spring is just around the corner as Warton Willy emerged from his burrow at 6:00 am on Friday February 2nd and was not startled by his own shadow. The overcast skies created perfect conditions for the marmot to freely and confidently emerge from his burrow. Legend has it that when the groundhog awakes from his winter sleep and does not see his shadow, we will have an early spring. Conversely, when the groundhog sees his shadow, it is an indication that we will have to wait until the official start of spring for the miserable weather to let up. Groundhog day is also traditionally a day of reflection where those typically considered narcissistic assholees need to change their ways.
